Wrestling with e-Reference Resources

Academic libraries are facing new and difficult challenges as we gravitate to e-Reference Resources. Do they extend, enhance or replace our print sources? How do they differ from bibliographic databases? How do these differences impact how we present them to our students? What are the pricing issues? What are the vendors doing?

In the morning session, we will hear from librarians who are tackling these issues daily. Rebecca Albitz of Penn State will give a presentation entitled Copyright, Licensing, and Electronic Resources: An Overview. Derik Badman of Temple University will speak about e-Resources from a public service perspective.

For the afternoon session, we are planning a panel of three publishers/vendors in the area of e-Resources and e-Reference in particular. Panel members will each give a brief presentation on current trends and developments in e-Resources. We anticipate that incisive questions from the audience will generate a lively discussion with the publishers' representatives.
